PREFACE.

THE Vairagya-Satakam is one of the three series of hundred verses which have come down to us under the title of Subhasita-trishati (lit. 'The finely worded three centuries') and associated with the name of the poet Bhartrihari. In some manuscripts, these verses exceed the number indicated in the above name, but we have followed the authority of an edition published by the Vaidya-sagar Press of Bombay, which maintains the exact original number.

Tradition attributes the authorship of these verses to Bhartrihari, the elder brother of the most renowned King Vikramāditya of Ujjaini. Controversy has not yet settled the point as to which of the two Vikramādityas was the brother of the poet and when he did he reign at Ujjaini.

In fact, it seems, that Bhartrihari belonged to a royal family and renounced the world later on in order to become a Yogi. The most reliable tradition is round which growing, and sometimes conflicting, traditions have continued to gather. There is still pointed out near Ujjaini, bearing the name of Bhartrihari, where Bhartrihari is said to have practised austerities. A book called the Nathalilamrita recording from hearsay stories about the celebrities of the Nathi sect of Yogis contains an account of Bhartrihari's life in a loose, legendary style. But it is easy to make out that, when all clue to authenticity about the real facts of Bhartrihari's life became lost to tradition, the memory of a career so stimulating to imagination was not allowed to go down so hopelessly denuded of facts, and the process of adding limbs and features to the stump of an older tradition naturally went on. Add to this process such floating legendary materials as the story about a gift made to one's beloved proving her infidelity by changing hands till it reached the donor again, or the miracles with which the then famous sect of Yogis used to be credited and so on, and you hope to get a fairly good biography of Bhartrihari such as gradually gained currency in tradition.

The verses, composed—maybe, with stray exceptions—by Bhartrihari himself, cannot be made to give any clue to his individual life, for his poetry seeks to create effect through style and sentiment too conventional to yield themselves to such use. But still his life-long lessons from experience and observation must have been reflected in their peculiar trend and emphases in the movements of sentiment through the verses; and it may be possible for a reader of penetrative intellect to trace out from such nice shades the bare outline of a deeper life of hard-fought struggles and late-won victory. A nature, straightforward, possessed of noble faith in itself, unambitious of high distinction among men, but deeply susceptible to the beauties and charms of sentiment, seems to have been involved once in a tangle of sensual enjoyments too heavy to leave it the sustained strength for wielding the sceptre, till from a life of such weakness and consequent dependence, it gradually rose through reactions, deep and incisive, to a wonderfully enriched sense of worldly vanity and an effective strength of renunciation. The verses composed by Bhartrihari tend to present to view the background of such a nature still holding in control lower susceptibilities, once indulged, by the dawning possibilities of a life of Yoga. And though it is difficult to ascertain how far this life of Yoga had advanced behind the role of the poet representing different stages of wisdom, it is fairly presumptive that the poet's voice gradually merged in the silence of the highest spiritual realisations.

The hundred verses of the Vairagya-Satakam are divided into ten groups under the following ten headings : तृष्णादूषणं, condemnation of desire ; विषयपरित्यागविडम्बना, futile efforts to give up sense-objects ; याच्नादैर्न्यदूषणं, condemnation of the poverty of a supplicant attitude ; भोगास्थैर्यवर्णनं, delineation of the evanescence of enjoyments ; कालमहिमानुवर्णनं, description of the working of Time, or the principle of change ; यतिनृपतिसंवादवर्णनं, a comparison as to how a monk stands to a king ; मनः-संबोधननियमनं, control of mind by stimulating wisdom in it ; नित्यानित्यवस्तुविचारः discrimination of the immutable reality from the mutable ; शिवार्चन, worship of Shiva ; अवधूतचर्या, the way of life for an Abadhuta, or a self-realised ascetic characterised by highest spiritual freedom.

With these few remarks of a prefatory nature, we send forth this English translation of an important poetical production of mediæval India into the world of modern readers. The translations have been made rather too closely literal specially to suit the convenience of those readers who want to follow the original Sanskrit with their help. Owing to the circumstance of the whole book being practically published in monthly instalments through the columns of the Prabuddha Bharata, we could not avoid prefixing a table of errata to this first edition.

2. Many are the inaccessible and remote places I have travelled and yet obtained no riches ; sacrificing proper dignity of birth and social position, in vain have I served the rich ; like the crows, have I fed myself devoid of self-respect,—at the house of the rich in the expectation of gain ; and you, O Desire, you prompter of evil deeds, are waxing lustier and are not still satisfied.

The earth have I digged into in quest of precious minerals, and metals from rocks have I blown; the ocean have I crossed, and the favour of kings have I diligently sought; nights have I spent on burning grounds with my mind occupied with mantras and worship; * and not even a broken cowrie have I obtained; be satisfied therefore, oh! Desire.

* This forms a part of the mysterious rites to be gone through by those who invoke supernatural agencies for obtaining riches.

4. In our servile attendance on the (wealthy) wicked, their shabby manners and talk we have somehow put up with; suppressing tears that welled up from our hearts, we have smiled out of vacant minds; obeisance we have made to dullards stultified by too much wealth ; in what more fooleries would you have me dance, oh ! Desire, thou of ungratified yearning.

5. What have we not endeavoured to do, with our depraved conscience, for the sake of our pranas (five vital forces) which are unreliable and compared to water on the leaves of lotus, since in presence of the rich, with their minds stupefied by the pride of wealth, we have shamelessly committed the sin of recounting our own merits !

[According to the scriptures, self-glorification is tantamount even to the sin of suicide.]

6. We have forgiven, but not out of forgiveness (but out of our incapacity to right our wrongs) ; we have renounced the comforts of home life, but not out of contentment after satisfaction (but as an exile from home in quest of riches); though we have suffered inclemencies of weather, cold and heat so difficult to bear, still it is no religious austerities that we have undergone; with subdued vital forces, night and day have we brooded on money and not on the feet of Shiva; we have performed thus those very acts which the Munis (saintly recluses) do perform, but of their good effect we have deprived ourselves

स्तपो न तप्तं वयमेव तप्ताः।

कालो न यातो वयमेव याता-

स्तृष्णा न जीर्णा वयमेवजीर्णाः॥७॥

[Here there is an ironical pun on the participles भुक्ता and तप्ता, the former being used both in the sense of "enjoyed" and "eaten up", and the latter both in the sense of "(austerities) performed" and "heated." Similarly the participle जीर्णा means both "reduced in force" and "stricken down with age." The effect of course cannot be preserved in translation.]

7. The worldly pleasures have not been enjoyed (भुक्ता i. e. enjoyed) by us, but we ourselves have been devoured (भुक्ता i. e. eaten up or dissipated); no religious austerities have been gone through (तप्तं), but we ourselves have become scorched (तप्ताः i. e. by the austerities of grief or anxiety); time is not gone (यातः, being ever-present and infinite), but it is we who are gone (याताः because of approaching death). Desire is not reduced by force (जीर्णा) though we ourselves are reduced to senility (जीर्णाः)

9. Though my compeers, dear to me in life, have all taken such a speedy flight to heaven (i. e. before being overtaken by age), though the impulse for enjoyment has wearied out and the respect commanded by all persons lost, though my sight is obstructed by deep blindness (or cataract) and the staff can raise itself but slowly on the staff, alas for its silliness; this body startles at the thought of dissolution by death.

10. Hope is like a flowing river of which the ceaseless desires constitute the waters ; it rages with the waves of keen longings and the attachments for various objects are its animals of prey ; scheming thoughts of greed are the aquatic birds that abound on it, and it destroys in its course the big trees of patience and fortitude ; it is rendered impassable by the whirlpools of ignorance and of profound depth of bed as it is, its banks of anxious deliberation are precipitous indeed. Such a river the great Yogis of pure mind pass across to enjoy supreme felicity.

11. I do not find the virtuous distinction produced (by ceremonial observances) through life after life to be conducive to well-being, for the sum of such virtuous merits when weighed in mind inspires fear in me. Enjoyments earned by great accession of merit multiply so greatly in the case of people attached to them only to bring them misery and peril.

विपाकः पुण्यानां etc.—The idea is to show the futility of good deeds performed in our earthly life with the object of enjoying happiness in the Heavens or the higher Lokas, for the heavenly enjoyments are transitory as being the result produced by our virtuous merits; when the force of these merits is spent out, the enjoyments must cease and the soul will again be drawn back to the cycle of births and deaths, until by Jnana or spiritual illumination, it has obtained Moksha or final release from the wheel of transmigration.

व्यसनमिव दातुं—It indicates that the enjoyment of pleasures in Heavens binds still more fetters on us by increasing our thirst and hence is the cause of an added volume of miseries.

12. The objects of enjoyment even after staying with us for a long time are sure to leave us sometime; then what difference their privation in this way makes to men, that they do not of their own accord discard them? If the enjoyments leave us on their own initiative, i. e. if they tear themselves from us, they produce great affliction of the mind; but if men voluntarily renounce them they conduce to the eternal bliss of self-possession.

13. Ah! it must be indeed a difficult feat which persons, with their minds purified by the discrimination arising from knowledge of Brahman, accomplish, in that, free from desire, they wholly discard that wealth which has been actually bringing them enjoyment; whereas we fail to renounce enjoyments which are reaped by us as mere longings and which we never did realise in the past, nor do we realise now, nor can we count upon as lasting when obtained (in future).

Blessed are those who live in mountain caves meditating on Brahman, the Supreme Light, while birds devoid of fear perch on their laps and drink the tear-drops of bliss (that they shed in meditation); while our life is fast ebbing away in the excitement of revelry in palatial mansions or on the banks of refreshing pools or in pleasure-gardens, all created (and brooded over) merely by imagination!

17. Among sensual persons, Shiva is unique, sharing half his body with His beloved; and again, among the dispassionate, there is none superior to him, unattached to the company of women; while the rest of mankind smitten and stupefied by the irresistible, serpent-like poisoned arrows of Cupid, and brought under the infatuation of Love, can neither enjoy their desires nor renounce them at will.

प्रियतमादेहार्धहारी—This refers to the symbolic representation of Shiva and Gouri in a single divided form.

“On one side grows the hair in long and black curls

* * * * *

One side is white with ashes, like the snow-

And that was a divided form,

Half-woman and half-man.”

भोक्तुं न मोक्तुं क्षमः—Ordinary persons when they give themselves up to enjoyments, lose all control and become slaves to them; so even when satiety comes, they cannot detach themselves from them, as the force of blind attachment has enslaved them. But Shiva, who has subdued his mind, is

18. Without knowing its burning power the insect jumps into the glowing fire; the fish through ignorance eats the bait attached to the hook; whereas we, having full discernment do not renounce the sensual desires complicated as they are with manifold dangers; alas! how inscrutable is the power of delusion.

19. When the mouth is parched with thirst, man takes some cold refreshing (or sweetened) drink; when suffering from hunger he swallows boiled rice made delicious with meat and the like; when set on fire by lust, he fast embraces his wife; so happiness is but the remedying of these diseases (of hunger, thirst and lust);—and behold, how man (i. e. his sense) is upset in its quest!

प्रतीकारं व्याधेः सुखमिति—The main point to be understood is this, namely that worldly happiness is but the temporary remedy we constantly seek from all the diseases with which worldly life is beset. When this relative and fugitive nature of happiness becomes apparent to us, we naturally give up running after it to seek permanent peace in renunciation.

Possessed of tall mansions, of sons esteemed by the learned, of untold wealth, of a beloved wife full of beneficence, and of youthful age, and thinking this world to be permanent, men deluded by ignorance run into this prison-house of worldliness ; whereas, he is blessed indeed who considering the transiency of the same world renounces it.

22. The pit of our stomach so hard to fill is the root indeed of no small undoing: it is ingenious in severing the vital knots, as it were, of our fond self-respect; it is like the bright moonlight shining on the lotus (that species which blooms only in the sun) of highly estimable virtues; it is the hatchet that hews down the luxuriant creepers of our great modesty.

the stomach when hungry, a man of self-respect would wander from door to door with a broken pot (in hand) having its edge covered with white cloth, away in extensive woodlands or holy places of which the approaches are grey all over with the smoke of sacrificial fires tended by Bráhmaṇas versed in ritualistic niceties, and thus preserve the pranas, rather than live (like) a beggar from day to day among those who are socially one's equals.

[It should be remembered that living on alms for a man of true renunciation is held in high esteem in India, for no social merit can be higher than giving up the world for the sake of the national ideal of spirituality.]

Or is it that herbs and roots in groovy caves, and streams on hill-sides have disappeared, or that branches of trees bearing luscious fruits and yielding barks are destroyed, that the faces of wretches, perfect and devoid of good breeding, are found to have their eye-brows dancing like creepers in the wind of an arrogance which their scanty earnings eked out with hardship engenders in them.

26. Therefore, now, accepting fruits and roots, ordained as sacred, for the most honorable means of maintenance, and (so also) the earth (laid on) with verdant leafy twigs for a bed, oh, rise and repair to the forest, where even the name is not constantly heard of the ignoble rich whose minds are stultified by indiscretion and whose speech is delirious with the maladies of wealth.

27. When there is the fruit of trees easily obtainable at will in every forest, when there is cool refreshing drink in holy streams from place to place and soft bed made of tender twigs and creepers, still (alas!) men aggrieved with lucre undergo sorrows at the doors of the rich.

28. Reposing on the bed of stone within the mountain cave, during intervals of meditation, (well) may I recollect with an inward smile the days of those afflicted through their suing before the rich, or of those grown mean through their minds being content with seeking enjoyments.

[If this verse is read differently with वर्धन्ते for वर्तन्ते and वासराणां for वासराणि, the idea becomes, in the words of Mr. Telang, this: "The suppliant of the rich thinks the days too long as he has to suffer the trouble of constant entreaties often unsuccessful; the person engaged in the pursuit of worldly objects thinks time too short; he has never enough of it to compass all his numerous ends. (On the other hand the philosopher laughs at both of these delusions." In this case ये in lines 1 and 2 refer to days, and for पर्याप्त in line 2 we have तृप्त्यस्त too.]

29. The felicity of those, whom contentment ^{contentment} unceasingly makes happy, is not interrupted, while the cravings of those of greedy and confounded minds are never ^{quench} quenched. Such being the case, for whom did the Creator create the Meru, representing immeasurable wealth, but confining to itself the glorious potency of its gold? I would not covet it.

कस्य कृते कृतः etc.—The idea is that Meru (fabled) mountain of gold, serves no useful purpose to anybody, and so I would not go in for it (न मे रोचते); because those that are contented are quite happy without possessing it, and those who hanker after wealth feel never satisfied howsoever might be their acquisitions. स्वात्मन्येव हेममहिमा—Its gold serves only to glorify itself and not to satisfy the greedy.

The great Yogis describe food which begging brings as follows : it does not humiliate (vide Verse No. 32); it is an independent pleasure (i. e. not dependent on the pleasure of earning money or fulfilling social duty etc.); it is in all respects free from any anxious fear (i. e. about one's expenditure, or food-stores etc.); it destroys wicked pride, egotism and impatience; it eradicates the manifold evils of worldly existence; it is easily available anywhere any day without efforts; it is the beloved of the holy men; it is a purification by itself; it is as the inexhaustible feeding-house of Shiva, access to which none can prevent.

[These three stanzas (nos. 45, 46, 47) strike a rather anomalous note. Here the poet personates a man whose life has been, like the lamp burning in a deserted abode, a thorough failure. Such a man is looking back on his youthful years of unmitigated worthlessness. But are the reflections he is making here typical of those who are at the threshold of true renunciation? By no means are they typical. The poet here simply takes up a particular case of an aspirant after renunciation which may just serve his poetical purposes best. This aspirant has had in his youth no taste of glory either as a pious man, a dutiful son, a scholarly student, a brave warrior or a lover of women. He appears to lament here that none of the fourfold aims of human life (धर्म, religious merit; अर्थ wealth; काम, fulfilment of desires, and मोक्ष, final salvation) has been pursued by him in the past with any the slightest success. Perhaps he means that that is best calculated to impress on his mind the vanity of all the ends of a householder's life. But this impression of vanity and consequent non-attachment may very well come, and come with perhaps greater completeness, to men who had the ability to succeed in life, and such men may all look back with any lingering regret on the moments he is going to leave behind, whether the harvest had been actually reaped by him. There is even some inconsistency in the regret running through these stanzas. But the poet is here more concerned with dramatic than psychological precision.]

What are worth the Vedas, the Smritis, the readings from Puranas, the vast Shastras, or the mazes of ceremonials, which give us, as their fruits, a resting-place in heaven, (which is, as it were,) a village (interspersed) with huts ! All else is but the bargaining of traders except that one way which admits one into the state of supreme bliss in one's Self, and which is like the (final) destructive fire to consume the evolving mass of worldly miseries.

[The Shastras, by which is meant here Logic, Grammer etc. and the six systems of philosophy are said to be vast because of the amplitude of comment, illustration and argument with which their doctrines have been developed.]

[जहुकन्या—the Ganges is so called on account of the myth that Rishi Jahnu drank it up and then disgorged it through his ear or thigh, when in its course towards the Bay of Bengal after its descent from the heavens it overflowed the sacrificial platform of the Rishi. Examination of the traditional place where the Rishi is supposed to have lived in ancient times suggests the likelihood of the course of the river being obstructed by an extensive eminence with pervious soil and of its delayed emergence on the other side.]

[This Sloka has been brought forward by the poet, as a doubt may arise in the mind from the preceding Sloka where the poet says that Shiva is the only Lord to take our refuge in. Here the poet says that really there is no difference between Shiva or Vishnu. But he is by nature attached to Shiva. This is what is called Ishta-nishtha, or the devotion to one's own ideal.]

जगदन्तरात्मनि---This word has been variously interpreted : (1) 'the inmost Self of the universe,' (2) 'One who is the knower of all inner things in the universe,' (3) 'One who is the Self of all in the universe, or it may mean, (4) 'in whose self is the whole universe.'
